

WIDE ASSORTMENT OF STYLES OFFERED MEN WHO SEEK CLOTHES FOR FALL

The telescope hats in pearl-gray and browns will be worn a great deal this fall by the youth who wishes a serviceable and natty knockabout hat. The brims are not as wide as have been worn and are in both the rough edge and braided edge.

The fall derby will have a large, full crown, and with a decided curl to the brim.

Single-Breasted Waistcoats, Without Collars, Will Be in Predominance This Year—Trousers Will Fit Easily Over Hips, but Will Taper Slightly Towards the Bottom—Black Derby Will Be Popular Headgear With Pearl and Black Fedoras in the Soft Shapes—Winter Overcoats Will Be Longer.

The clock of fashion is about to strike once more, and the great houses of tailors and dressmakers who specialize their efforts to the clothing of mounted men will be buying plans for the fall campaign.

The garment is already on the wane, and the gaudy garments will go to the last weather, more soon be laid on the shelf and preparation made to face the chill of autumn, with heavier material.

The reports from the fashion centers of the country and abroad, who dictate the fashions are to be believed this will be a most fashionable fall. The man who dresses in dress will have the assurance to come from the fashion world that he will be dressed in the latest style.

The coat inappropriate for street and business wear will be of worsted, in subdued colors; gray and broken plaid of quiet tones. The vest will be cut low and full, with decorative work on the back. The shoulders will be broad and more natural than in previous years, being slightly sloping. The lapels will be long and graceful, broadening the waist.

The trousers will not be in the extreme for the proper dresser. They will be cut to fit easily over the hips, with a slight tapering towards the bottom. The trousers of the correct dresser will have a slight break over the shoes. No cuff tops will be way to worsted or mixed colors and plain effects. The stockings will be in the both of brilliant hues and subdued colors, allowing of a wide choice for the buyer.

The young man who delights in dress will have the same this fall. The styles will be so varied that he can go to almost any length. The drowsy young man's neckwear will be of light colors and of moderate width, to harmonize with the clothing of mounted men who buy planes for the fall campaign.

VEST'S SINGLE-BREASTED. It is in his vest that the careful dresser will shine. All vests will be single-breasted and without collars. The opening in the vest will be lower than in previous years, allowing more of the shirt to show. The waistcoat will be varied, but he can go to

The padded coat will be up to the notch this fall. All the overcoats will be worn rather full. Blacks, oxfords and fancy mixtures will prevail.

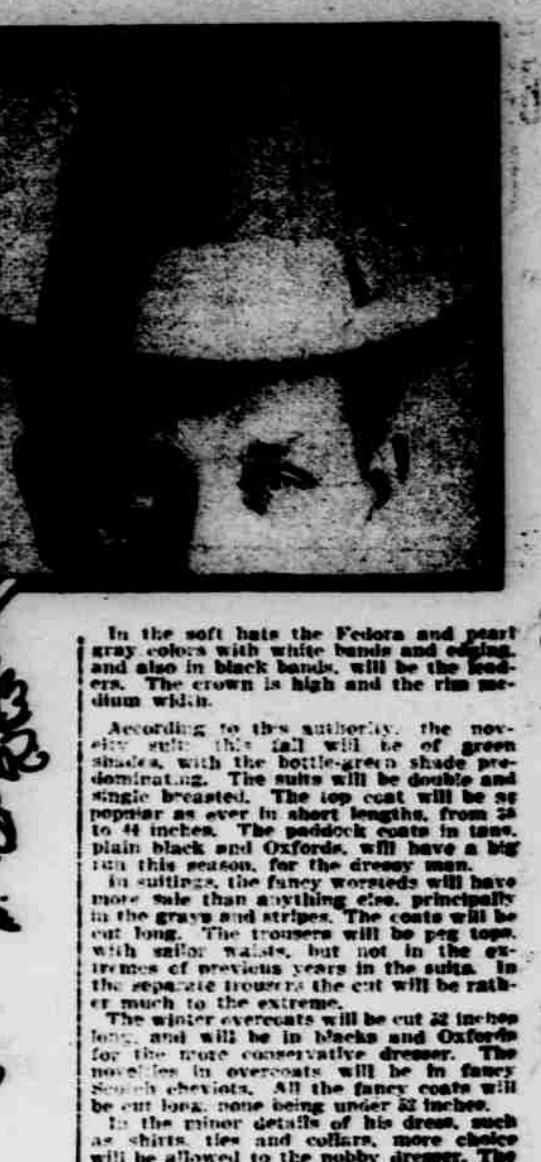

For street and business wear the new fall waistcoats in a gray or broken plaid have a cut that spells style in every line. With this coat one of the new fancy waistcoats will be worn.

For street and business wear the new fall waistcoats in a gray or broken plaid have a cut that spells style in every line. With this coat one of the new fancy waistcoats will be worn.

Gray worsted suits look rich and dandy. The shoulders are padded differently from the styles of a year ago. The trousers are of a medium cut, sailor top, fitting easily over the hips, narrow thigh and slightly tapered at the bottom, with a slight break over the shoe.

In the soft hats the Fedora and pearl gray colors with white bands and edging, and the black bands, will be the leaders. The crown is high and the rim medium width.

According to this authority, the novelty with this fall will be of green shades, with the bottle-green shade predominating. The coats will be double and single breasted. The coats will be as popular as ever in short lengths, from 30 to 44 inches. The paddock coats in tan, plain black and Oxford, will have a big place in the dress.

In cuttings, the fancy worsteds will have more sale than anything else, principally in the gray and stripes. The coats will be double-breasted, with wide bands with sailor waist, but not in the extremes of previous years in the suits. In the separate trousers the cut will be much more to the extreme.

The single overcoat will be cut 32 inches long, and will be in blacks and Oxford for the more conservative dresser. The novelties in overcoats will be in faint stripes, and the double-breasted will be cut long, none being under 32 inches.

In the minor details of his dress, such as shirts, ties and collars, more choice will be given to the nubby fabrics. The shirts will be in plain, plain colors, as well as quiet patterns, with a slight check. The collar in vogue will be the medium-size tab collar, although the popular size will be the wide.

The wider the neckline this fall the more fashionable it will be. The collars will be in plain solids and fancy materials.

Handskerchiefs will be part of the dress to a degree this fall, and the careful dresser must see to it that he has the up-to-date styles to fill his linen.

The gloves will have a high standing.

Fashions say that a handkerchief must be worn in the overcoat pocket this fall and will be of silk or linen, in one of the solid colors.

Gloves will all be worn in the heavy cape stock. Those for street wear will be in heavy tan. Gray gloves will be in heavy tan. Browns will be in tan. The soft hats have a gray, black and brown. In fact, the prevailing shades will be grays, browns and tans, with some tan.

The soft hats are of a pearl gray color and to the fine shape, which is the only negative mark the firm recommends the new Alpine or Fedora. This hat comes in a high crown and with a medium brim. The coat will be about 32 inches high and the suit about 34 inches wide.

LABOR DAY MARCH IS NOW ARRANGED

Parade Divided Into Sections and Will Start on Twelfth Street—Celebration to Be Held at Lemp's Park.

At a meeting of the Central Trades and Labor Union at Wallin Hall, tenth and Franklin avenues yesterday afternoon, the line of march for Labor Day was selected and the order of the divisions was named.

Although Labor Day is still a week away, Grand Marshal John J. Doherty reported that most of the arrangements had been completed and that all the locals had received their instructions in regard to the march.

It is expected that fully 17,000 members of organized labor, representing the majority of the labor unions and councils in St. Louis, will be in the line of march.

Lemp's Park, Twelfth and Franklin streets, will again be the place for holding the festivities. Athletic contests will be held in the afternoon, and numerous other attractions will be arranged for afternoon and evening.

The divisions will form on the streets running east and west. Twelfth Street will be kept clear until the time for falling in line, when each division will file into the park.

The march will move north to Washington avenue, east to Broadway, south to Poste-land street, west to Thirteenth street and south to Lemp's Park.

To reinforce the squad of mounted police will head the procession, Grand Marshal Albinus having asked Chief Kline to have a platform in front of the line.

The following is the line-up of the divisions:

Grand Marshal, Charles Albright, and aides, P. A. Austin, Dave Cushing, Edward Lederer, W. J. Gaffey, J. J. Gaffey, James Steppenwolff and John Stumpf.
